There are many paths which one may walk that leave a sense of fulfillment and joy behind. There is the path of romance, as two people nurture all that love has to offer until they find a perfect union. There is the path of family, and the struggles which come with not only having children, but helping to ensure a safe and harmonious future for their children. Yet one of the most rewarding and gratifying paths a person can walk is that of a dream. We all dream of one thing or another in this life, and the accomplishment of that dream fulfills a sense of completion and wholeness few other paths can promise.

A dream is the true heart and nature behind author Kevin Aelred Dettler's Hunting: You've Got to be Kidding!. The book follows the author's path as he set out to accomplish his dream of the North American 29, an award from the Safari Club International for capturing and collecting all 29 registered big game animals on the North American continent. Utilizing a fusion of humor, wit, and charm, the author melds the dream of his with his never-ending faith and beliefs to share the journey he took – to not only accomplish this goal – but pursue a dream overall.
